

7 Questions to Help You Evaluate Independence

Looking Beyond the Transition

The independent channel continues to evolve, offering advisors a broad range of platform and business model choices. From RIAs and hybrid models to aggregators and supported independence platforms, the question is no longer whether to go independent, but where and how to build your independent business. The advisors who make the strongest long-term decisions look beyond payouts and custodians. They ask thoughtful questions about ownership, growth, flexibility, and long-term alignment before choosing a partner.

The seven questions that follow are designed to help you evaluate your options and determine which platform best supports the business you want to build.

Finding the right partner

The right platform should do more than facilitate a transition. At Concurrent, our mission is a platform where entrepreneurial advisors maintain ownership of their business while gaining the infrastructure, community, and resources to grow with confidence.

01 Client portability

Why do my clients work with me, and would they follow me?

Strong independent practices are built on relationships that outlast any single platform. When your value is trust and personal connection, clients follow the advisor, not the logo on the statement.

03 Operational support

How much time will I spend on operations versus serving clients?

Independence should not mean doing everything yourself. The right platform absorbs compliance, technology, and administration so your time stays focused on clients and growing your business.

05 Community & collaboration

Will I be part of a true community, or simply a network?

Strong advisors don't build in isolation. They surround themselves with peers who openly share ideas, experiences, and best practices that help accelerate growth while building a durable business.

07 Long-term vision

Where do I want my practice to be in five, ten, or twenty years?

The best decisions are driven by long-term alignment, not short-term economics. Your platform should support the practice, lifestyle, and legacy you want to create for years to come. Whether that means scaling your team, acquiring other practices, or preparing for succession, choose a partner invested in the same destination.

02 Ownership structure

Am I building a transferable business, or simply generating income?

Compensation matters, but ownership matters more. Many of the strongest independent advisors build a transferable asset designed to support long-term enterprise value.

04 Growth infrastructure

What resources and expertise exist to help me keep growing after day one?

Transitioning is an event. Growth is a strategy. The right platform is built for where your business is headed, with meaningful support for marketing, recruiting, succession planning, and practice development.

06 Flexibility & autonomy

Can I build and run the practice I actually want for my clients and team?

Every advisor has a different vision. The right platform adapts to the business you want to build instead of forcing you into a single operating model.
